V.P., ACADEMIC AFFAIRS:

Date of Faculty Meeting Change

Since a sizable number of the faculty have indicated that they will be attending convention meetings on the evening of April 1, we have decided to postpone the next faculty meeting until Wednesday evening April 8. It will be held at 7:30 P.M. in the College Union Lounge.

Material on several questions proposed for the meeting will be distributed before hand.

Merit Scholarships Sponsored

In its last meeting college Council decided to drop two competitive scholarships presently offered under the title of Development Scholarships and to divert these resources plus an additional scholarship grant made to the College recently into two National Merit Scholarships to be sponsored by the College. The College will choose from finalists who have been selected on the basis of ability and achievement by the National Merit Corporation and who have designated La Salle College as the college of their choice. The scholarships represent the first academic grants that could include room and board.

The following excerpt is from a letter sent to highschool counselors by the Admissions Office to announce the scholarships:

Last autumn the magazine America, in an article about National Merit Scholars at Catholic Colleges, indicated that La Salle was among the top institutions in the country in attracting these students.

Needless to say, the College has been pleased about this situation and sometime ago inaugurated a program of partial scholarships to aid other qualifiers in the National Merit Examinations. In addition to that program, La Salle is now joining other colleges in sponsoring its own National Merit Scholars.

Beginning next fall, therefore, two scholarships offered by the National Merit Corporation will be designated La Salle College Merit Scholarships. These scholarships in amount up to $1,500.00 each, will be awarded to finalists who have designated La Salle College as the college of their choice.

Research Grants

The Catholic Educational Association of Pennsylvania has recently set up a program of small research grants to support studies of immediate relevance to catholic education. The Association is allocating two thousand dollars to be used as grants-in-aid for religious or lay teachers assigned to Catholic schools in the Commonwealth and working for advanced degrees. Individual applicants will be eligible for grants not to exceed $250 to defray part of the cost of such research. Each application must include a brief summary of the proposed study and the procedures as well as expected outcomes. Applications are to be submitted between June 1, 1964 and May 31, 1965. Applicants will be notified immediately of the decision of the Executive Committee and payment will be made on receipt of the completed manuscript. Each awardee is to submit a summary of the final study not to exceed 3,000 words which may be published in the CEAP Bulletin. The application should indicate the name of the applicant, address, school, the degree sought, and the date of the completion of the work. Signature of the professor-director of the study is also required.

All applications are to be forwarded to Sister Eugene, Ad. P.P.S., Secretary, CEAP, 1017 N. Front Street, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

Evening Catalogue Ready April 15

The 1964-65 Evening Division Catalogue will appear on April 15. It will include the following important announcements:

- The new curriculum for the Bachelor of Arts Degree in English and History will be outlined.
- The tentatively revised curriculum for the major in Industry will be presented.
- The revised program in Chemistry will appear.
- The area "majors" in Business Administration will be reduced from eight to four programs. Although most of the courses in Business Administration will continue to be on the roster, an attempt to lessen proliferation of majors is outlined by the incorporating of "majors" in Economics, Insurance and Finance into the General Business major curriculum. The Industrial Relations program will be similarly incorporated into the Industrial Management Program.

CHAPLAIN'S OFFICE:

Permission Available To Read
Required Books For Study

The Rev. Mark Heath, O.P., College Chaplain, has received from Archbishop John J. Krol, of Philadelphia, the following authority:

To grant to individual faculty members or students of the College permission to read and retain books and periodicals forbidden by the Church which they may need to read to fulfill properly their obligations or to follow lawfully a course of studies.

It is understood that in using it, the reader will take prudent and proper safeguards that the reading is not for him an occasion of sin and that it does not fall into the hands of others.

Request for this permission may be made orally or by a form which will be available at the offices of the Librarian, the Chaplain (C-111) or the Vice President of Academic Affairs.

The Chaplain of the College must make an annual report to the Archbishop on his use of this authority.

V.P. ACADEMIC AFFAIRS - Cont'dIN THE LITERATUREChanged Perspectives of Colleges Today

( from the recent report of President
Nathan M. Pusey to the Harvard College Board of Overseers ).

By and large we have been running hard to keep up with demands created by the forward rush of knowledge and the widening range of intellectual interest within the university.

There has been a concomitant increase in the number and variety, and in the insistence of expectations which confront the university from outside. There has also been a persistent raising of standards of achievement within the university, for students and for faculty, and a continuous growth at the apex of what I have frequently called "the higher higher learning."

Responsibility Cited

These changes owe much to the fact that America has become a different kind of country since the war. We have created a society dependent on scientific knowledge. We have a wider responsibility in the world. We need to know more about more places and more kinds of people. We need to work harder to help build a stable world order. We need more-and more kinds-of highly trained people than an earlier generation could have conceived. Without them we cannot keep our country running and do well many of the things we are now called upon to do.

It is the responsibility of the colleges and universities, with the schools, to produce these people. We have been working hard to meet increased responsibilities inside and outside universities. But in the total national effort universities have come to play roles incalculably more immediately and more decisively related to the motivation and to the quality of that effort than in our earlier history.

We believe that, because of her past achievement and present strength, Harvard continues to exercise in this effort a special responsibility for both training and research. The sum total of what I have wished to say to you is simply to assure you that all who have been associated with Harvard during the past 10 years have been working in changed circumstance to clarify her augmented high purpose and to increase her strength to enable her to fulfill it.

In our founders' understanding of Veritas the moral component was undoubtedly as prominent as the intellectual. And it must continue to be so with us, for desperately as the world needs knowledge, if knowledge does not come to fruition in people of moral sensitivity who care and who will stand, the world will have little good of it. Here is work beyond the school and outside the home, particularly for colleges and a special role for Harvard College.

Dynamic Period

It is possible that the past year has seen the close of a single exciting and very dynamic period in the development of higher education in America which began with the Second World War. Perhaps we now stand at the beginning of a new period.

Several considerations seem to me to suggest that an era of change is indeed in prospect. The long anticipated cresting wave of young people of college age is now beginning to break over us. The next four years will see many of the Nation's colleges inundated with students. In what may very well prove to have been belated anticipation of this increase the Congress of the United States this year for the first time in our history enacted legislation designed broadly to help institutions of higher education rather than specifically to strengthen some activity it was thought they could serve.

The first indication of this changed attitude appeared last summer. At that time the Congress passed, and the late President, our lamented former colleague and Overseer, signed into law, the Health Professions Educational Assistance Act in which Congress recognized direct responsibility for at least one important segment of higher education.

And last December, by passing the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963 to help provide classrooms and other resources for an enlarged college population, the Congress gave evidence of agreement with the view long urged upon it that strong higher education has now become indispensable for continued national well-being and that the Federal Government therefore can no longer refuse to be directly concerned for it.

Programs Studied

It is at least curious that the same session of Congress which took this almost revolutionary step also initiated what promises to be the first serious and searching examination of the Federal programs of support for research which contributed so enormously to the dynamism characteristic of higher education in universities during the past 20 years.

The rate of increase in support of scientific research will inevitably slow in the years ahead, though science itself must remain strong. It is possible that the impression of overpowering strength, of a capacity to annihilate other disciplines and to absorb into themselves everything that remains, which faint-hearted humanists have been inclined to attribute to the natural sciences since the war, has already begun to lose its power to terrify or to dismay.

Rather there now seems to be a growing willingness, not least among scientists, who are perhaps in the vanguard in this trend, to recognize the importance of other fields, to concede place to other than scientific values, and to be genuinely interested in a variety of methods of approach. In a period as troubled and perplexed about national goals as is ours, and as worried about the role moral values must play in their attainment, interest in the humanities cannot fail soon to revive. Indeed there are indications that such a revival has already begun.

Let me conclude with the affirmation that what keeps a university advancing is a community of devoted people each of whom pushes forward his own pursuits with imagination, industry and concern in the confidence that his colleagues are doing the same, and in a shared sense of value.
