Alan Paton, Author & South African Expert, Receives Honorary Degree at La Salle Convocation

Best-selling author Alan Paton, one of the most prominent advocates of social justice in South Africa, was honored as that nation's "voice of Christian sanity" at La Salle University's annual Honors Convocation on Sunday (October 19), in the Ballroom on campus.

Paton, the author of "Cry, the Beloved Country" and "Too Late the Phalarope," among others, was awarded an honorary doctor of humane letters degree. The former president of South Africa's multi-racial Liberal Party shared the spotlight with some 484 La Salle University's Deans' List students—including 159 men and women from the Evening Division. The convocation's theme was "Literature and Religion."

Claude Koch, a professor of English at La Salle and a prize-winning novelist in his own right (1985 O'Henry Award for one of the nation's 20 best stories), sponsored Paton for his honorary degree which was presented by La Salle University's Brother President Patrick Ellis, F.S.C., Ph.D.

Paton, who entered his adult life as a schoolmaster, was praised by Koch for "instructing us in the sternest of virtues in a voice that is gentle without weakness and just without malice," before receiving his honorary degree.

"He has written of his beautiful land, of South Africa, of the beloved country, with a compassion and an understanding that break one's heart," said Koch, "with sorrow for all mounted on that bitter cross: Afrikaner, Black, Colored, Indian, or White.

"His novels, poems, and short stories, his drama, spread out before us the agony of South Africa that turns not only race against race, but child against parent, and—through the subtle forms of psychological torture that are instruments of the modern glorified state—friend against friend.

"His essays and public utterances bring to order an incisive mind whose self-criticism is as rigorous as that directed against the follies of his society—a mind uncorrupted by sentimental claims and the lesser claims of friendship, and illuminated by Franciscan charity.

"His writings teach us impatience with American politicians, innocent or self-serving, black or white, who emerge from week-long junkets to that troubled and unspeakably complex land with pat solutions arrived at in the easy and selective and contemptible anger of uninvolved and secure outrage. He has been South Africa's voice of Christian sanity for all the world to hear."

After earning degrees in science from the University of Natal, Paton spent the first 25 years of his career as an educator and principal of a reformatory for young men where he quickly became known as South Africa's leading expert on penal reform.

It was, in fact, on tour of penal institutions in Europe and America in 1946-47 that he started and completed "Cry, the Beloved Country," which has sold more copies in South Africa than any other book with the exception of the Bible. In addition to being translated into 12 languages and becoming a best seller in the United States, Paton's novel about a Zulu person's search for a sister, a son, and his own faith was adapted into a motion picture under the same name as well as a long-running Broadway musical, "Lost in the Stars."

For nearly four decades, Paton, 83, has enjoyed an international reputation for telling the world about life in South Africa. As a result, he had his passport seized for ten years and has been virtually ignored by the Afrikaner press and ruling elite. He was one of the founders of the multi-racial Liberal Party in 1953 and was its national president at the time of its forced demise in 1968.

Paton has been highly praised for his ability to analyze human motivation, for his sharp insight into political and social conditions, and for his reportorial accuracy.

"Literary men with an active interest in politics are rare," said W.B. Gould. "There are, however, a few who have used their artistry as a political weapon, and among those few, Alan Paton of South Africa is notable."
