SUBJECT: Exploratory Meeting to Revive the "University as Catholic" Conversations

A group of interested people met recently to begin to explore the desirability of reviving the "University as Catholic" discussions which were held regularly from 1987-91. This group decided to meet again, and, to insure that no one was excluded from the discussion, I was delegated to issue this invitation to all interested parties. We will meet on Wednesday, December 7, in College 303, at 2:30 pm. Everyone (not only faculty; not only Catholics) is invited.

The hope is to determine whether there is sufficient interest to schedule an initial series of such conversations. With a little luck, we may even be able to set an agenda.

One reasonable suggestion already on the table is that we might, after clarifying the situation here, reach some consensus about something practical which we could do, rather than engage in endless discussion. Another is that the LaSallian conception of "shared mission" is worth serious examination. Marc Moreau, in a recent public forum, has suggested the desirability of initiating (at no cost) a multidisciplinary program of Catholic Studies. I list these only to suggest that there is no little interest, and no lack of ideas.

Two final notes:

- There is nothing in any way "official" about this. We are one group of citizens of this community welcoming other citizens to a conversation which seems important.
- If you cannot come and want to express your interest, call me at X-1666 or drop me a note.

Campus News is distributed weekly to foster communication and encourage information sharing among University departments.
