(News of La Salle's Community-Learning)

Volume 1, Number 2

Community-Learning vs Service-Learning

You may have heard the term service-learning used in the past as a way of speaking about courses with a community service component. You may also wonder why at La Salle we call it community-learning, rather than service-learning. The answer is really simple. The emphasis in service-learning is placed on the service being performed by the students. However, the emphasis in community-learning is both on the service and on community building. One of the goals of the Center for Community Learning at La Salle is to help our students, faculty and staff become better neighbors and community members. As a result, we place the emphasis on solving problems together and on partnership, which allows for a mutual relationship between La Salle and community members to develop.

This approach is one based on the gospel values of equality and justice, and on civic responsibility as articulated in the founding of the United States.

Community-Learning in the Lasallian Tradition

The founder of the Christian Brothers, St. John Baptist de La Salle, emphasized reaching out to the most marginalized of society. Through these outreach efforts, persons who previously did not have access to education could attend school. Community-learning is also an outreach to those who are often-times forgotten or dismissed in society. It is rooted in the Lasallian tradition and is an important element of our mission as educators in the tradition of St. La Salle.

Congratulations to Mike Smith of the Communication Department for submitting the winning title for our Newsletter! He will receive a community service tee-shirt for his submission. Thanks to everyone else who also submitted entries.

If you are interested in integrating community-learning into your courses, please contact the Center. Some suggestions of how this can be done are provided on the other side of this newsletter.
