La Salle Receives $100,000 from Lincoln National Foundation to Establish Enterprise Resource Computing Center

PHILADELPHIA – La Salle University has received a $100,000 grant from the Lincoln National Foundation to establish a new computing center in its School of Business Administration. The center will help augment new University programs in science, business and technology and in electronic commerce.

“The Lincoln National Foundation’s grant will go a long way to help train Philadelphia’s workforce of the future,” said Brother Michael McGinniss, La Salle’s President. “As we seek to prepare students to enter the working world, this gift will help us to provide them with an excellent experience in state-of-the-art business technology. I can’t thank the Lincoln Foundation enough for their foresight.”

The grant was one of five that the foundation, the philanthropic arm of Lincoln National Corporation, made to city charitable and educational groups. La Salle was the only institution of higher education to receive such a grant.

Jon A. Boscia, president and chief executive officer of Lincoln National, said, “We know that Philadelphia, like many cities, has suffered from a corporate ‘giving gap’ that has widened in recent years. I hope our actions today are a signal that we’re prepared to help close that gap here in Philadelphia.”

Lincoln National, which relocated its corporate headquarters to Philadelphia from Indiana, has a company policy of donating 2 percent of its pre-tax profits to the community. In addition to La Salle, the company made four other gifts totaling more than $1.4 million.

The Enterprise Resource Planning Computer Center will be a state-of-the art computing center that will allow La Salle graduate and undergraduate students to gain first-hand knowledge of how technology, particularly in resource management, is changing business.

“When you buy a product, there’s software that automatically updates inventory, sales, pricing – everything,” says Gregory O. Bruce, dean of La Salle’s School of Business Administration. “How that software is changing the nature of business is evolving every day. Working in this center will give students a chance to not only work with state-of-the-art computers and software, but to see exactly how those tools are used, how business and technology are merging.”

The center has benefited from two corporate gifts – the Lincoln National grant, which will be used for computers and related equipment, and a donation of business software from SAP, Inc., the software manufacturer based in Kennett Square, Pa.

“With technology changing business – and creating a need for a workforce that can manage that technology – La Salle has been adding programs and majors that will provide graduates with the background to meet the challenges of business in the 21st century,” said President McGinniss. “The new computer center will enhance these new programs by giving students the opportunity to work with the tools they’ll be using in the real world.”

Last fall, La Salle began its Electronic Commerce Institute, in which students from any major can gain an understanding of web-based and internet business. In the next few months, the university will offer an e-commerce certificate program for working professionals and an e-commerce specialization in its popular MBA program.

Next fall, the university will launch its Integrated Science, Business and Technology program (ISBT), which will provide students with a core of scientific knowledge integrated with a business curriculum. One aim of ISBT is to train managers who will bridge the worlds of science and technology with financial segments of a corporation.

La Salle is a comprehensive, coeducational university established in 1863 by the Christian Brothers, a Roman Catholic teaching order. Today, the university educates more than 6,500 undergraduate and graduate students in nearly 60 academic disciplines. One of seven Christian Brother colleges and universities in America, and one of 72 around the world, La Salle is built on a strong tradition of quality education, service to students and overall excellence.
