10-1988

Kathe Kollwitz (1867-1945)

La Salle University Art Museum

Caroline Wistar

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.lasalle.edu/exhibition_catalogues

Part of the Fine Arts Commons, and the History of Art, Architecture, and Archaeology Commons

Recommended Citation

Selected Works of Käthe Kollwitz
in Celebration of Women in the Arts and Social Justice Weeks

La Salle University Art Museum

October 10 – November 20, 1988
KÄTHE KOLLWITZ (1867-1945)

She was a woman artist of international stature, a wife, devoted mother of two sons, and an art professor who strove always to combat the social injustices so abundant in her lifetime. All of these roles she undertook with grace but without fanfare. And her artistic renditions transcended the particular and took on a universal significance with which we can easily identify today.

Towards the end of the nineteenth century (the period of Kollwitz's artistic development), women artists were just beginning to emerge from four hundred years of relative subservience. Despite little public encouragement and even some official derision, Kollwitz quietly and deliberately pursued her career during a turbulent and tragically disturbing period in German history.

Although raised in moderately well-to-do circumstances, Kollwitz's compassion for the underprivileged working class was nurtured by members of her politically enlightened and morally idealistic family. Her grandfather and father were especially active in promoting democratic values during the autocratic rule of the Prussian regime, while her doctor-husband, who shared equally Kollwitz's concern for the poor, chose to run a clinic for the working class in the slums of north Berlin.

In addition to the oppressions of the Prussian Empire, Kollwitz's work was especially affected by the general poverty, suffering, death and destruction which enveloped Germany during World War I (when her son was killed), the Weimar Republic, Hitler's Nazi regime, and World War II (when her grandson was killed).

While maturing and developing her work under these tragic circumstances, Kollwitz was further inspired by the social compassion of such well-known literary figures as Gorki, Dostoevski, Ibsen, Zola and especially by the German dramatist, Gerhart Hauptmann. A few of the artists who influenced the style and content of her work were Max
Klinger, Ernst Barlach and Auguste Rodin.

In 1885 Kollwitz attended the School for Female Artists in Berlin and in 1919 she became the first woman elected to the Berlin Academy of Art where she was later made Professor and given a free studio. She remained at the Academy until she was forced to resign by the Nazis in 1933. It should be noted here that Kollwitz throughout her life advocated an artistic education for women on an equal basis with men.

In spite of Kollwitz's progressive stance and her support of the Socialist party, she was not a political activist or a vocal expositor of causes. She chose to make known her beliefs primarily through her art. With quiet observation, reflection, and preliminary drawing, she delineated her favorite subject: the power and compassion of woman. And nowhere was this concern more forcefully shaped than in her images of motherhood, especially the working class mother as constant nurturer, provider, and protector of children from the savage brutalities of war and its resulting deprivations. Often, especially in her early works, the role of woman as active participant and even motivator of social protest movements was frequently stressed. The constant feature in most of these images was the resilience and tenacity of the mother in the face of hardship, offering a powerful suggestion of the great potential of woman to reform the inhuman conditions that plague the world.

The dominant medium for Kollwitz's work was the print. She produced only a few pieces of sculpture but executed over two-hundred-and-seventy etchings, woodcuts and lithographs, often experimenting and combining a number of print techniques.

Although this exhibition includes only a handful of Kollwitz's works, we hope it will give the viewer insight into the contribution of a remarkable woman artist and her commitment to humanitarian values. Her achievements may be considered exemplary for her time as well as ours, balancing a family and professional life despite personal tragedy and political upheaval. We are reminded, too, that the social injustices she exposed are too often witnessed at a distance from which we remain, unfortunately, altogether detached.

Caroline Wistar
Curator
SELECTED BIBLIOGRAPHY

4. Lederer, Herbert (Introduction), A Selection of Prints by Käthe Kollwitz from The Landauer Collection of The William Benton Museum of Art, (Storrs, Conn: The University of Connecticut Foundation, 1975)

5. Lein, Malcolm E. (Prologue), An Exhibition of Graphic Works by Käthe Kollwitz from the Permanent Collection of The Minnesota Museum of Art... (Saint Paul: Minnesota Museum of Art, 1973)

EXHIBITION CHECKLIST

Unless otherwise mentioned the prints in this exhibition are Re-strikes, impressions printed after the original edition is no longer available. The re-strike is pulled from the original plate that has usually been altered or re-worked by someone other than the artist or original printer to compensate for worn lines on the printing surface. Therefore, these impressions (in most cases posthumous) are generally more heavily inked and have less subtle gradation of tone when compared to an original impression pulled by the artist or someone under the artist's supervision. Re-strikes are available for a moderate price as compared to the cost of an original print.

1. Self Portrait 1912
   Original etching and soft ground
   Given by Ruth Armon

2. Self Portrait at the Table 1893
   Etching

3. Mourning Man 1919
   Etching

4. Woman with Bowed Head 1905
   Etching

5. Storming 1897
   Etching

6. The End 1898
   Etching

THE WEAVER'S REVOLT 1897–1898

This series of prints is based on the social protest drama of the same title by Ger­hart Hauptmann. This play was concerned with the 1840 Silesian Weavers Revolt against the introduction of mechanical looms into the craftsman's cottage industry.
7. Four Men in the Inn for the theme “Conspiracy” 1892–93
Etching and aquatint

8. March of the Weavers 1897
Etching

PEASANT WAR SERIES 1903–08

This series is based on Gerhart Hauptmann’s play, “Florian Geyer.” This drama concerns the sixteenth century Peasant Rebellion, a violent and tragic episode in German history. As Zigrosser points out, women are the protagonists in seven prints, and this fact reflects Kollwitz’s concept of women as both leaders of events and as tragic survivors.

9. Plowmen 1906
Etching and aquatint
10. The Assault 1903
Etching

11. Mother with a Child on her Arm 1910
Etching

12. Whetting the Scythe 1905
Etching and soft-ground technique

13. After the Battle 1921
Etching on soft-ground

14. Self-Portrait 1921
Etching

15. Death, Woman and Child
Etching
16. Self-Portrait, (half length in profile)  1938
Lithograph
Printed posthumously and signed by the artist’s son, Hans

17. Mother Feeding Child  1932
Etching

18. The Call of Death  1934-35
Lithograph
Printed and signed by the artist’s son, Hans Kollwitz

19. Self Portrait While Drawing  1933
Reproduction of charcoal drawing

20. Self-Portrait  1936
Bronze

Käthe Kollwitz
Etching