Charles Reilly started his business in the family garage in 1972. Today he's one of the nation's largest distributors of flexible foams.

One thing about Charles Reilly. He's not afraid to take a chance!

He also knows a little bit about marketing.

Combine these traits with a few million Nerf balls and you're well on your way to building some highly-successful businesses in flexible foams, real estate, medical packaging, and cosmetic products.

"I got lucky," recalls Charles J. Reilly, '62, the president and founder of Reilly Foam Corporation, who started his business in the garage of his twin house in Philadelphia's Roxborough section in 1972. Since then it has grown into one of the nation's largest fabricators, converters, and distributors of polyurethane and other flexible foams.

Operating with 160 employees out of plants in suburban Philadelphia, Hartford, Conn., and Jupiter, Fla., Reilly's company takes foam manufactured by its suppliers and converts it into products ranging from air-conditioning filters and mop-heads to disposable pre-op scrubbers or EKG pads for the medical profession. Its filters were used to protect helicopter engines from the sand during military landings, and a rapidly-increasing variety of products such as eye-brow applicators and toe-nail separators are being marketed for the cosmetics industry.

"We make little parts out of big parts," Reilly explained recently from his office at company headquarters in Conshohocken, Pa. "Most of what we do is a little bit upscale when it comes to the foam industry. I use the analogy that we're in the automobile business. We have the Rolls Royce, the BMW, and the Mercedes franchises. We also sell Fords and Chevrolets, but only if we get our price."
It was, in fact, Reilly's first decision to make a little part out of a big part back in the late 1960's that literally got the ball rolling for him. He was working at the time as East Coast sales manager for Foamake Industries, a Michigan-based foam distribution company, and got involved with the Parker Brothers game people. Kicking around ideas one day, they developed the idea for the Nerf ball.

"It started out as an indoor game," Reilly recalls. "But when they put together the cost of the paddle, net, and table, they thought it was kind of pricey. They were getting ready to drop the idea when I suggested, 'why don't we just go with the ball? Why don't we do a market survey?'"

Officials of Parker Brothers, a privately-held company at the time, weren't quite sure what a market survey was. "I suggested that we make up 100,000 Nerf balls, pick a geographic area, and test-market them," says Reilly. "We did that and the response was unbelievable!"

So unbelievable, in fact, that Reilly's company soon found itself producing and packaging the new concept by working three shifts daily at its two plants seven days a week, and flying planeloads of Nerf balls, Super Nerf balls and Nerf footballs all over the country. In the first year alone, they sold nine million products.

When Reilly's sizable Nerf commission arrived each quarter, he would take the check, drive to Ocean City, N.J., and invest in another real estate property. This later evolved into the Reilly Real Estate Partnership, a family partnership specializing in development in South Jersey and Florida.

Reilly is also a general partner of Reilly-Mita Industries, a real estate partnership that purchases, renovates, develops, and rents industrial properties. His partner in this venture is F. Paul Mita, Jr., '56.

In 1989, Reilly co-founded Safeguard Biologicals, which specializes in medical packaging for the pharmaceutical industry. Bernard J. Dillon, Jr., '59, is president and CEO of the company which also purchases plasma from different hospitals, processes it and then sells it to pharmaceutical companies. They, in turn, break it down and use the various components for different medical tests.

"The plasma business is like the commodities business," says Reilly. "Prices fluctuate. Sometimes the market is up. Sometimes the market is down. When it's up, it's really good. When it's down, it's really bad. That's why we introduced a line of medical packaging items--vials and things of that nature. This part of the business is growing rapidly and doing extremely well. When the plasma business is down, the packaging is there to support it."

The rapid growth of another business--Cosmetics--prompted Reilly to start his fifth company, Kathleen's Cosmetics, named after his wife and oldest daughter, last April. "We do a tremendously large volume with the cosmetics industry," he explained. "Everything from powder puffs to fingernail polish remover. It's a big market and we hope to be a major player in it. We bought a lot of automatic equipment to give us a little productive advantage. We think we have the proper marketing strategy and the right products. The reception so far has been exceedingly good."
According to industry experts, Reilly Foam is perhaps the most profitable, most feared, most aggressive company of its kind. In fact, its growth rate was so phenomenal in the late 1980s--approaching 50% at times--that Reilly took steps to slow the business down on a number of occasions before, as he says, it got out of control. "My philosophy was if we're bringing new business in the front door and losing old business out the back door, we're only kidding ourselves. We controlled our growth until we were able to bring in additional machinery and personnel to accommodate everyone."

Today Reilly Foam is one of the half dozen or so "A" fabricators in the nation, so-designated because it is one of the few major distributors equipped to handle upscale, high-tech applications and higher-priced materials. "We leave the so-called commodity products to other distributors," Reilly says. "We don't get involved with products like cushioning, bedding, and furniture because the profitability is not that exciting."

Reilly began his career at Scott Paper Company selling foam to fabricator convertors--"People just like Reilly Foam," he recalls. He left the company to go into the leasing business for a couple of years, then was offered a position heading up East Coast sales for Foamade Industries, one of his former customers at Scott Paper, when that distributor decided to expand.

After the phenomenal Nerf Ball/Parker Brothers success, however, the Foamade people cut his commission in an attempt to keep his salary in line with other salesmen. Another commission cut followed in 1972 when they decided to abandon their Eastern operation and concentrate in the Midwest.

"That's when I left and went into competition with them," Reilly recalls. "But I'm still very friendly with the owner. He once told me, 'We gambled that you wouldn't leave. We gambled that you were doing so well that we could play with your commission a little bit.' I said, 'Well you gambled and you lost.'"

Reilly operated out of the family garage for a while, then took over part of a building in Philadelphia's Manayunk section before moving to Conshohocken in 1983. The Hartford plant opened in 1981 and Florida has been in operation for almost two years.

Three of Reilly's four children are working for their dad. Joseph, '88, is Reilly Foam's national sales manager. Michelle, a '91 graduate of Boston College and a CPA, came on board last year and handles the firm's accounting and financial affairs. Brian, '95, recently completed the company's sales training program. His other daughter, Kathleen, a Harvard MBA graduate--"and a very successful young lady," is a marketing executive with American Express.

"It's nice to have the kids around," says Reilly, who expects to turn the reigns over to them in the next few years. "It really energizes me. The boys are just a pleasure to be with and there's no doubt in my mind that they're going to be successful. And Michelle has really made my life a lot easier by taking over a lot of the financial aspects. It’s very comforting to know that the company is doing well and that the children are succeeding me.

“To be honest with you, I feel like I’ve gotten a couple of more arms and a couple of more legs. I like to tell people that my job has changed from being the quarterback. I’m now the coach.”

And what is the secret to Reilly’s success?

“I tell my children, and I would say the same to all young La Salle graduates, ‘don’t be afraid to take a chance.’” he says. “There is a tremendous difference. I consider myself a risk-taker. I’m not a gambler. I don’t go to the race track. I don’t play the numbers. People ask me why I don’t go to the race track and I tell them it’s because they won’t let me ride the horse.

“But I will take a chance on real estate investment. I will buy stock in a company that I think has potential growth. But I see so many bright people out there who are afraid. I don’t say that you have to bet the whole farm all the time but take a chance once in a while. The rewards of being in business for yourself are very gratifying. I would encourage every young person to consider the option of being self-employed, whether it be a doctor, dentist, lawyer, business entrepreneur, or whatever.”

Reilly and his wife, Kathleen Marie, have been married for 32 years. They spend various parts of the year at their homes in Villanova, Ocean City, and Admiral’s Cove, Florida. “I really enjoy being with my family but I don’t recreate enough,” he says. “My wife is constantly on my back to get out and play more golf but I tell her that I enjoy being at my desk. I like playing the stock market. I like investing in real estate. I consider those to be some of my hobbies. But I probably should develop more outside interests.”

Reilly, who grew up in southwest Philadelphia, served for two years with the U.S. Army 502nd Airborne. He worked his way through La Salle thanks to the GI Bill and a full-time job at night as a bartender. He made the decision to commute to 20th and Olney after talking to his future brother-in-law, Lenny Fernandez, ’53, who was then dating his oldest sister, Rita. “I was very impressed with him. He rowed on the crew team and was an outstanding guy,” recalls Reilly, who was also familiar with the Christian Brothers and felt very comfortable with them.

“I have great memories of La Salle and the people I met there,” says Reilly who earned a bachelor’s degree in accounting. “It was just a great experience. Unfortunately I did not have chance to participate in social activities because I only had two Saturday nights off in four years. But the friendships I made at La Salle are still the friendships that I enjoy the most today.”

These friendships have also helped to foster a life-long commitment of dedicated service to La Salle for Reilly, a member of the university’s Board of Trustees since 1992. A major benefactor to La Salle, Reilly conceived the idea for the annual Charter Day Leadership Dinner four years ago. He shared the concept with Thomas N. Pappas, ’70, the managing principal and senior vice president of Johnson & Higgins. The two of them have served as co-chairs of the event since its inception. Gross receipts from this year’s dinner amounted to $142,450.

“My dad taught me two things,” Reilly recalls. “Number one, whatever you give to charity, you get back ten-fold. And I honestly believe that. He also told me that what you do for yourself goes to the grave with you. What you do for others lives on forever.

“It’s just a nice feeling that I’m in a position to be able to give back to La Salle. I’m a little disappointed that more people in the same position aren’t a little more giving.”
Honor Roll of Donors

Dear Friends:

On behalf of everyone at La Salle, I should like to thank our many benefactors for their exceedingly generous support for the University during the 1995-96 fiscal year.

As detailed in this Honor Roll of Donors, the past year was an exceptionally successful one for our fund-raising program, and we are all very grateful for the outpouring of support that made this achievement possible.

Among the many highlights noted in the Honor Roll, the following are worthy of special mention:

1. Total gifts and grants from all sources increased from $6,052,214 to $6,549,322. Fiscal years '95 and '96 have been the two best years in the history of our development program, with the sole exception of the years during which Mr. and Mrs. John F. Connelly and The Connelly Foundation were funding the construction of the Connelly Library. Since 1994, total gifts and grants have increased by more than 21%.

2. Alumni and parent donors both achieved new record-setting highs as 7,433 graduates and 1,044 parents contributed $1,829,259 and $100,293 respectively to La Salle.

3. The fourth annual Charter Dinner/La Salle University Leadership Award Ceremony honored Mr. Nicholas A. Giordano '65, President of the Philadelphia Stock Exchange, and raised more than $105,000 for the University's scholarship fund.

4. Three major planned gifts were received during 1995-96, including $27,793 from the estate of Catherine E. Doran, '78, $82,112 from the estate of Francis R. O'Hara, Esq., '54, and $340,000 from the estate of Almira C. Bainbridge. Special thanks are due to Frank S. Blatcher '56 and Gerald P. Ginley, Esq. '54 for their efforts regarding the O'Hara and Bainbridge donations respectively.

5. Total gifts, grants, and pledges to the capital campaign passed the $27 million mark.

Quite clearly, the past year has provided a solid foundation for the future. As we move forward, we ask those of you who have supported La Salle in the past to continue to do so, and, wherever possible, to increase your commitments to the University. Your assistance is critically needed as we strive to enhance financial aid so that the next generation can afford the cost of attending La Salle. At the same time, we ask those who have not yet participated in our development/annual fund campaigns to make every effort to do so this year. With your help, La Salle will continue to prosper and to provide the high calibre education that is the hallmark of the Christian Brothers.

Many thanks again to everyone whose generosity and support has contributed so significantly to La Salle's success.

Sincerely yours,

Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D. '68

Although he's played the sport for less than three years, Derek D. Brown, '93, led the United States men's handball team in scoring as the Americans pulled off two big wins en route to a ninth place finish--its best ever--in the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta.

Brown, who participated in varsity basketball and track for the Explorers, scored 26 goals in the Olympics despite playing only four complete games. He suffered a pulled hamstring in the first ten minutes of the opener and didn't return to action until the third game. The U.S. beat Kuwait and Algeria after dropping its first four games to eventual gold medalist Croatia, silver medalist Sweden, Russia, and Switzerland.

"Realistically we were considered the underdog from the start," says Brown. Team USA finished 30th in the recent World Championships and qualified for the Olympics only because the Americans were hosting the event. "Everyone thought that we would not win a game. But we were very confident in the way that we were training and playing. We really felt that on any given day we could beat any team."

Brown, the Most Valuable Player of the 1994 National Team Championships, says that the Americans are "still fighting a lot of old handball ghosts" as far as world-wide respect is concerned. This despite winning the 1994 U.S. Olympic Festival and finishing as high as second in the 1995 National Championships and third in the 1994 Pan American Championships.

"People don't really consider the USA good handball players," he explained. "They think that we are just a bunch of athletes thrown together to make a mockery of the sport. But that's not true. We've become a really good team and I think it's about time for us to get a little more credit internationally."

The USA handball team had 16 members. Seven players are on the field at one time, positioned somewhat like a soccer configuration. In addition to a goalie, there are two wings on each end, left and right backs who perform like shooting guards in basketball, and a center back who is similar to a point guard.

Brown says that team handball is a great spectator sport. "Just the athletic nature of it makes it attractive," he explained. "It's fast-paced. It's not a long game (two halves of 30 minutes each) and takes less than an hour-and-a-half to complete.

The Gold Medal game, won by Croatia over Sweden, 27-26, attracted a crowd of 32,439 to the Georgia Dome. "It was just a great atmosphere to be in," says Brown.

Brown's college athletic experience turned out to be a tremendous asset, "especially in the position (right wing) that I play. We're supposed to be the speedy fast guys who are the first ones up and the first ones back all the time," he explained. "My track background definitely helped with that."

Brown's first experience with the sport came when USA Team Handball lived at La Salle and trained in Hayman Hall from February, 1993 to March, 1994.
"Like everybody else in this country, when you hear handball you think of smacking a little ball against the wall," he explained. "When I first saw it I really was skeptical. I had no idea what it was about and I really didn't care because I never heard of it."

When Brown finally saw the team in action, however, his opinion changed. "I thought, 'Wow! This is really different. This is really interesting! It's a lot of running and a lot of jumping and there's physical contact involved. I've been doing this all my life, anyway."

After being given the opportunity to practice with USA Team Handball for a week, Brown fell in love with the sport and officially joined the team in September, 1993. Since then he's traveled all over the world—from Argentina to Iceland and Hungary, from Brazil to Russia and Japan, among other nations. And, of course, there was that visit to the White House with other members of the U.S. Olympic team to meet President Clinton in August.

Nothing can match Brown's Olympic experience, however.

"Just playing in the games was incredible," he recalls. "But the thing that I will remember most is the lighting of the torch by Muhammad Ali. It was just amazing to see Ali up there lighting that torch. And it was a great feeling just being in the Olympic Village around all those athletes from different countries. Some may have a little more success or notoriety, but just to talk and say, 'Hey, what's going on?' was just a great experience."

Brown says he will never forget the Opening Ceremonies. He really didn't get to see much of the festivities because the team was forced to wait in an adjacent practice field for more than three hours while the other 197 nations marched in.

"By that time we were all kind of numb," he recalls. "We saw the fireworks and heard the music but by the time we got to march we were tired. It was 11:30 before we even got to the stadium. But when we went up that ramp and looked over, it was like 'Oh my goodness!' It was just an incredible feeling. To hear all the cheers for the U.S. team was just amazing. It was definitely worth the wait.

"I've watched just about every opening ceremony from the other Olympics and I'd get goose-bumps and tear-eyed every time. And now it was for me. I really don't think that the whole thing has sunk in yet. It would have been nice to have won a medal, but I will always be happy just to have been there. Nobody can take that away from me."

Brown, a native of Washington D.C., earned bachelor's degrees in finance and English at La Salle where he made All Conference in track two years. He is now in Europe where he has been signed to play professional team handball for Sweden's National Team.
