New College Continues Enduring Tradition of Professional Education
A Legacy of Practical Education for Adults

JOSEPH UGRAS, PH.D., CMA, DEAN OF THE COLLEGE OF PROFESSIONAL AND CONTINUING STUDIES

THE COLLEGE OF PROFESSIONAL AND CONTINUING STUDIES follows the Christian Brothers’ tradition of “meeting students where they are”—geographically, intellectually, and professionally. Historically, the Christian Brothers have worked to respond to the social needs of the community. St. John Baptist de La Salle strove to respond to these needs not only by providing education for the poor boys of 17th-century Rheims, but also by establishing means to train teachers to provide practical education to students of all ages and abilities.

Carrying on the Founder’s vision after his death, the Brothers of the Christian Schools in 19th-century France were recognized for their ability to respond to new needs in education. Their innovative and notable programs included classes in the evening for adults. Between 1830 and 1848, the Christian Brothers taught more than 48,000 working men in evening classes in France.

In this issue of La Salle Magazine, you will read about how the University remains committed to St. John Baptist de La Salle’s legacy of education for all—including working adults who juggle courses, families, careers, and many other responsibilities. Led by Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., ’70, La Salle’s President, the University solidified its dedication to adult learners with the creation of its first college in 2006: the College of Professional and Continuing Studies.

The College was established to accommodate the educational needs of adult learners. Its structural autonomy allows it to be creative and to quickly respond to those needs with new programs and services. The professional environment is now far more complex, given broader access to technology, globalization, changes in the way we communicate, and increased access to information through the Internet. To advance professionally, adults must equip themselves to meet complex professional challenges, and organizations need to continuously develop their workforce to stay competitive and pursue new opportunities.

In the past, an undergraduate degree was considered the terminal degree. Many individuals spent the majority of their working years in the same position at the same organization. Today, however, many careers demand a graduate degree, certificate, or other form of ongoing education and training in order to remain up-to-date in the field and gain specialized knowledge in their discipline. The value of education for adult learners is manifested in professional as well as personal growth.

For adult learners, courses of study need to be focused and compact to accommodate busy schedules. To that end, the College offers convenient programs in the evenings or on weekends and delivers programs beyond Main Campus in Northwest Philadelphia. Programs offered at our Bucks County Center in Newtown, Pa., allow adult learners to experience the same La Salle excellence without the commute to Philadelphia. Our new location at the Metroplex Corporate Center in Plymouth Meeting, Montgomery County, will be open for adult learners who want to study closer to home or work starting in January 2008. More La Salle courses are being offered through the convenience of online technology, and specialized, online non-credit courses, such as Six Sigma training, project management, Microsoft certification, and medical coding for health-care professionals, are offered as well.

While La Salle continues to provide opportunities for personal and professional growth to students starting or continuing their college education as adults. The College of Professional and Continuing Studies is also working closely with the Office of Alumni Relations to play a larger role in addressing the lifelong educational needs of our graduates. We intend to be the institution of choice of all adult learners for their practical educational needs. I look forward to seeing you at one of our programs.

New College Continues
Enduring Tradition of Professional Education

WHEN ADULTS DECIDE TO RETURN TO COLLEGE TO CONTINUE THEIR EDUCATION OR ADVANCE THEIR CAREERS, THEY BRING WITH THEM A UNIQUE SET OF NEEDS AS THEY BALANCE JOBS, FAMILIES, AND SCHOOL. FORTUNATELY, AS YOU WILL LEARN ON THE FOLLOWING PAGES, LA SALLE’S COLLEGE OF PROFESSIONAL AND CONTINUING STUDIES HAS SET OUT TO MEET ADULT STUDENTS’ NEEDS IN LINE WITH THE TRADITION OF ITS FOUNDER—AND EXCEED STUDENTS’ EXPECTATIONS OF HOW CONVENIENT, COMFORTABLE, AND INSPIRING AN EDUCATION CAN BE.

In 1946, La Salle’s Evening Division officially opened with 36 students. Hugh Carroll, ’52, was the first student to officially enroll in the Evening Division. The Hugh Carroll Award is now given to a Professional and Continuing Studies student who has made significant contributions to the University’s evening undergraduate programs.
BY THOMAS W. DURSO

BILL KLINE READILY CONCEDES THAT when he visits area employers and community colleges to talk to potential students about La Salle's College of Professional and Continuing Studies, the University's mission is not at the top of the list of topics they want to discuss.

"They ask about accelerated programs and locations," said Kline, the College's Associate Director of Recruitment for Bucks County. "Adult learners want to get done as quickly as possible, and they're looking for convenience."

Yet as pragmatic as those aspects of education sound, targeting programs to people's needs, educating students in accessible locations, and meeting them where they are in life are an integral part of the Lasallian mission. Through six decades of name changes, new structures, and differing educational emphases, that mission has remained a constant.

"The University's commitment to nontraditional learners has been ever strong," said Liz Heenan, Assistant Dean of the College. "The mission of the Christian Brothers has been to work with and support nontraditional students of all types. But our approach to satisfying their needs has changed over time."

And the College has responded accordingly.

Lighting Up Campus

Founded in 1946 as La Salle's Evening Division, the program was launched in large part to educate soldiers and sailors returning from World War II; they worked during the day and studied at night. Legend has it that founding director Joseph J. Sprissler, D.C.S., kept the lights on in all classrooms despite the sparse early attendance in order to signal to passing automobile and foot traffic that La Salle was serious about evening education.

The Evening Division became the School of Continuing Studies in 1991; four years later it was rechristened the Office of Continuing Studies. A 2005 reorganization led to the creation of the current incarnation, the College of Professional and Continuing Studies, which educates adult learners seeking bachelor's and master's degrees in a variety of fields and offers an array of certificate programs, many of them reflecting the most current professional trends.

"We have a comprehensive collection of courses," said Joseph Y. Ugras, Ph.D., Dean of the College. "Some of them are online; some of..." them are hybrid—a mix of online and face-to-face—and some are purely face-to-face. From subjects such as communication to computer programming to Microsoft certification to business, we have a whole set of opportunities. These are going to continue to evolve, and every year, we think, we’re going to change 10 to 20 percent of what we offer in the nontraditional arena to provide state-of-the-art, new developments in the field.

Identifying the seminal changes of an institution that has undergone almost constant evolution since its inception is no mean feat, yet if one were pressed, zeroing in on the eight-year tenure of Brother Emery Mollenhauer, F.S.C., as dean of the Evening Division wouldn’t be a bad place to start. From 1961 to 1969, enrollment in the Evening Division more than doubled. Br. Emery installed a curriculum that replaced an emphasis on technical education with a focus on liberal arts, and the Evening Division went co-ed, three years before the day school did.

“They were the happiest years of my life,” Br. Emery said. “Later presidents of the University told me I was a kind of president at night.”

From 1964 to 1983, the Evening Division published its own Evening Collegian, independent of the standard college newspaper. Previously, the Collegian had dedicated one page to news from the Evening Division.
A Unique Approach

As students and, later, as graduates, those who earn degrees from the College of Professional and Continuing Studies enjoy an experience that, though obviously different, is no less Lasallian than what traditional-age students encounter.

John Malone, who taught writing in the Evening Division and School of Continuing Studies from 1961 to 1992 and now is an adjunct professor of English in the School of Arts and Sciences, notes that while Evening Division students are as bright as their younger counterparts, they typically display a greater sense of seriousness and drive. “They are extraordinarily conscientious, hard-working students in the Evening Division,” he recalled. “They are goal-oriented; they want to succeed, and by and large they work very hard to do so. They have a more serious approach—more business-oriented.”

That approach, melded with the same academic rigor that prevails in the day school, has helped La Salle’s adult education division to produce Woodrow Wilson and Fulbright scholars, among other achievements. Many alumni have gone on to become leaders both at the University and within the Philadelphia region.

“La Salle prides itself on a long tradition of serving the needs of nontraditional students,” said James K. Gulick, ’89, Assistant Vice President for Alumni Relations. “They don’t have any less strong an affinity for the University—it’s just a different affinity. They make strong connections with the University, often in different ways.”

Making a Connection

The Lasallian notion of meeting students where they are dates all the way back to St. John Baptist de La Salle, the founder of the Christian Brothers, who taught in the vernacular and on Sundays, because that was the only free time commoners had to pursue education. Moreover, he adapted his curriculum according to the particular needs of students, instructing those along the coastal area of Normandy in navigation, for example, and teaching bookkeeping in Paris, France’s commercial center.

That sense of adaptability has informed a spirit of evolution within the College that continues to this day. Location in Bucks and Montgomery counties, certificate programs in contemporary subject areas, and graduate programs overseas reflect the College’s longstanding ability to respond to student desires in terms of both programming and delivery.

“The Brothers have always practiced pragmatism,” said Raymond Ricci, ’67, former Vice President for Enrollment Services and now Special Assistant to the President for Lasallian Mission and Assistant to the Provost for Freshman Year Programs. “They’ve always had an eye on providing educational programs to help people move along in life. The idea of providing programs that meet market needs has been a guiding principle throughout all of the College’s forms.”

Malone recalled teaching writing to a La Salle cafeteria worker, a woman in her early 60s, who was taking classes at night. The woman earned a poor grade in Malone’s class, and so he was surprised to find her back in his classroom the next semester. He tried to persuade her...
Bringing Programs to the Students

BY MARIAN BUTCHER

More than 60 years after La Salle officially launched its Evening Division, College Hall isn’t the only place that lights up at night. In addition to Main Campus, classes are held at satellite centers in Bucks and Montgomery counties. La Salle’s lights even shine overseas, in the Czech Republic, Greece, and Switzerland, and on the Internet.

“Many years ago, we decided to follow Saint John Baptist de La Salle’s guidance and bring the La Salle excellence to where the students are,” said Joe Ugras, CMA, Ph.D., Dean of the College of Professional and Continuing Studies. “Our working students do not have to travel to Main Campus to enroll into a La Salle University program. The programs and the services are brought to the students in state-of-the-art centers that are learning-friendly for working adults.”

In this era of juggling family life and career, La Salle’s approach has been to bring education to the students. Those who live or work outside of Philadelphia may find it more convenient to enroll in classes in Newtown, Pa., at the Bucks County Center, or in Plymouth Meeting, Pa.

Opened in 1997, the Bucks County Center was expanded in 2006 with an additional 20,000 square feet, 13 classrooms, a science lab, a computer lab, and two nursing labs. The resource center/library, dining facility and student lounge, and executive seminar and conference space were also expanded.

La Salle classes in the MBA and Clinical-Counseling Psychology graduate programs had been held at Gwynedd-Mercy College in Montgomery County until this fall, when the University announced that it would move its Montgomery County operations to the Metroplex Corporate Center in Plymouth Meeting, Pa.

“The location seemed to have all of the best features for our students—a great location just off major roads, a chance to have a space constructed to our specifications, and a unique opportunity to give our students the best of the best in terms of a facility for learning,” said Terry Jackson, Director of La Salle’s Part-time MBA Program.

landed a job counseling senior citizens for the state of Pennsylvania. That was something I'll never forget."

Potential students may not ask about La Salle's mission, but once they enroll in the College of Professional and Continuing Studies, somehow the mission finds them.

La Salle students can do just about anything at these satellite centers that they can at Main Campus: buy their books, obtain a La Salle student ID card, register for classes, or meet with an adviser.

In addition to the graduate-level business and psychology programs initially offered in Plymouth Meeting, Ugras said plans are afoot to begin offering Professional and Continuing Studies programs.

Students who have taken classes at the Bucks County Center attest to the benefit of a shortened commute to class.

"In addition to the appeal of the organizational dynamics curriculum, the convenience of the Bucks County Center was a major factor in my selecting La Salle University to complete my undergraduate studies," said Terri Neumann, '07, of West Trenton, N.J., who completed her bachelor's degree in organizational dynamics last year and works for the Law School Admission Council in Newtown, Pa., as a senior member of the technical staff.

Adult students from a number of countries also are benefiting from La Salle's commitment to taking education to the students. Students are enrolled in master's-level Professional Communication courses in Prague, Czech Republic, and Athens, Greece, where they are often taught by La Salle faculty members. La Salle's MBA has also traveled overseas, to Basel, Switzerland, where professionals from all over Europe meet every weekend for an intensive 12-month curriculum.

Another one of La Salle's newest locations is the Internet. More and more faculty offer classes in full or partial online format, making it easier for students to learn from that most comfortable of locations: home.

METROPLEX PROVIDES CONVENIENT LOCATION FOR GRADUATE COURSES

Beginning in January 2008, La Salle will offer courses in the state-of-the-art Metroplex Corporate Center in Plymouth Meeting, Montgomery County.

Currently, La Salle offers graduate-level courses in business administration and psychology on the campus of Gwynedd-Mercy College in Montgomery County. Moving to the Metroplex will create a centrally-located site for graduate and continuing studies students from Montgomery, Delaware, and Chester counties.

At the new location, La Salle will continue to offer its MBA and Clinical-Counseling Psychology graduate programs and is planning a wider course selection.

The new facilities will house classrooms, a computer lab, an all-purpose room, and administrative offices.

SUSAN DILENNO, '06

It was difficult for Susan Dilenno to commit to return to school and sacrifice all of her free time—but she said the College of Professional and Continuing Studies strove to accommodate its students.

"The faculty was well-aware that most of the students were working full time while attending school, and they were very amenable to changing the syllabus when necessary to meet our goals," she said.

While enrolled at La Salle, Dilenno was inducted into Alpha Sigma Lambda, was chosen as an outstanding student in organizational dynamics, and maintained Dean's List status each semester. By returning to college, Dilenno was able to obtain a promotion.

"The program helped me to realize that I could have career goals," she said. "Going through the program while working helped to reinforce that the courses had relevant and immediate practical applications."

Dilenno graduated maxima cum laude with a degree in Organizational Dynamics in May 2006. She works as a professional sales coordinator at Johnson & Johnson.
An Accessible Education

BY LIZ VARGO

One of Bill Kline’s crowning moments as Associate Director of Recruitment in La Salle’s College of Professional and Continuing Studies came recently when a former student approached Kline’s daughter at graduation.

“She said, ‘Because of your dad, I came back to school and (the College of Professional and Continuing Studies) was with me the whole way,’” Kline said. “It’s all about the service that we give.”

Returning to school after five, 10, or even 20 years in the professional world can be a daunting task. Jim Rook, Associate Director of Professional and Continuing Studies, said students can become anxious of the unknown.

“They experienced college at a much younger age, and it wasn’t always a good experience,” Rook said. “But they find incredible success because they bring maturity to the classroom.”

In a traditional setting, undergraduate students have a built-in support system. La Salle strives to similarly accommodate adult learners who face a challenging family life, stressful work demands, and continued education.

Traditional and accelerated classes are offered in the evenings, online, and on Saturdays. Technology plays a major role in accessible, convenient training. Joseph Ugras, CMA, Ph.D., Dean of the College, said the faculty learns to effectively use emerging technology and determine what can be accomplished in an online format. Many classes work more efficiently as a hybrid that combines traditional and online elements.

“The ability to use technology and still preserve the opportunity to get together face-to-face is really great,” said Stephen Hart, ’90, a graduate of La Salle’s evening program and the part-time Director of Organizational Dynamics and Liberal Studies. “We need to respect the learning styles and experiences of each student.”

Nearly all University services are available in the evenings, while most adults are taking courses. Students can register for classes, order from the bookstore, obtain an identification card, and accomplish other University tasks at satellite campuses or online.

“We are a phone call or a mouse click away,” Ugras said. “The faculty works to make it possible for students to learn in a convenient way. We’re at the point where you don’t have to come to Main Campus—except to participate in graduation.”

Students who are concerned about the commitment of returning to school can participate in study skills workshops. Opportunities also exist for prospective students to observe classes.

“The teacher is more like a moderator. The students bring their own life experiences,” Ugras said. “The professor has to adapt to allow the experience of students to be shared with each other.”

For those who are considering a career change, the College has partnered with the Office of Alumni Relations to provide services through CareerPath. This online tool helps students and alumni explore different careers with an opportunity to contact professionals. It also helps alumni market their skills.

“La Salle has a real desire to be an attractive choice with innovative programming and well-delivered, high-quality education,” Hart said.
Innovative Lifelong Instruction

BY LIZ VARGO

Life doesn’t end with a four-year college degree, according to Joseph Ugras, CMA, Ph.D., Dean of the College of Professional and Continuing Studies. With higher education in increasing demand, statistics show this is only the beginning of a lifetime of learning.

“Continuing education has to be a part of every graduate’s life, no matter what discipline,” Ugras said. “There are two main reasons people return—to stay and expand their education in a certain discipline … or to shift careers to a different track.”

La Salle aims to meet the needs of a growing number of adult learners through undergraduate degree-completion programs, international graduate programs, certificates, post-baccalaureate programs, and professional development courses.

The start of La Salle’s Evening Division in 1946 has evolved into today’s undergraduate completion program, according to Ugras. Developed on the principle of convenience, the program is available in a variety of disciplines through accelerated or traditional courses at night, online, or on Saturdays. A new day undergraduate degree-completion program in business or criminal justice, called the 2+2 program, will begin this summer at La Salle’s Bucks County Center in Newtown, Pa. In this program, students spend the first two years at Bucks County Community College and complete the degree at La Salle’s Bucks County Center.

The graduate program follows a similar system in an international setting. Programs offered in Athens, Greece; Prague, Czech Republic; and Basel, Switzerland are expanding La Salle’s efforts to meet educational needs in different countries.

Certificate programs, such as Fraud and Forensic Accounting, and professional development courses, like Art Understanding and Appreciation, allow professionals to examine a specific aspect of their field, Ugras said.

In post-baccalaureate programs, students who received their degree in an unrelated field are able to pursue and prepare for a career in a health-related field or in speech-language pathology.

Stephen Hart, ’90, said La Salle was the only university that gave him the time of day when he decided to pursue a bachelor’s degree in marketing in 1980. Now, as the part-time Director of Organizational Dynamics and Liberal Studies for the College of Professional and Continuing Studies, he touts the time and effort the University commits to its students. Advisory boards research the corporate community to devise the most marketable and beneficial programs.

“La Salle is making tremendous strides and efforts to understand the needs of adult learners,” Hart said.

“New things emerge; new subjects emerge,” Ugras said. “People are realizing this, and that’s why there’s continued growth in education.”

Federal and state laws often mandate that professionals enroll in courses to maintain their education or advance in the workplace.

Advances in technology—both in and out of the classroom—play a major role in continued education. La Salle faculty is constantly re-evaluating the application of technology. Distance learning and hybrid courses with a strong technological component add to convenience and accessibility.

Since 47 percent of the adult population nationally has never completed a bachelor’s degree, Ugras noted that there is an expansive market for the adult learner. Every school attempts to tap into that market, according to Associate Director of Recruitment Bill Kline, but La Salle takes a unique approach and maximizes its appeal through specialized programs, strong service, and convenience.

“There is so much competition and we’re basically going after the same students,” Kline said. “People know our reputation—if you graduate from La Salle, you make an immediate contribution.”
THOMAS A. LEONARD, ‘70, SAID HE couldn’t help but notice how his accounting professors, such as Jack Reardon, ‘59, Pete Sweeney, ‘47, Walt Kaiser, and Joseph Markmann, ‘49, devoted so much energy to helping their students, not only during their time at La Salle but after they had graduated.

“They would help students get jobs,” said Leonard, “and took a real interest in them post-college, and I felt I should do something similar.”

And Leonard has done more than “something” in emulating his teachers.

Leonard is currently Treasurer of the Alumni Association Board of Directors, and he has served as a member of the Council of President’s Associates and been a generous donor to La Salle. He and his family have recently held fundraising events to benefit a scholarship he and his family started in memory of his daughter, Danielle, who died during her senior year at La Salle.

One fundraiser was a baseball game put on by a long-time family friend, Jeff St. Amour, who built a ball field adjacent to his home (and used the same materials used by major league teams to build their fields). St. Amour provided an organist for music between innings and had an announcer, who did an impersonation of Phillies broadcaster Harry Kalas.

“Danielle was a fabulous girl and student,” said St. Amour. She had interned with him at Pricewaterhouse-Coopers “and we had a job waiting for her,” he said.

St. Amour said Danielle had a keen interest in athletics, so having a sporting event to raise funds for the scholarship was both fitting and a way to “keep Danielle’s spirit alive,” he said.

Tom Leonard was the home plate umpire (even though he stood behind the pitcher). By the end of the game he had his “strike-three-you’re-out” call down cold.

Between the baseball game and another event the Leonard family held this year, about $45,000 was raised for the scholarship. The scholarship fund now totals about $150,000.

Danielle Leonard, like her father, came to La Salle to study accounting (three of her siblings also graduated from the University). The scholarship in her name is awarded to a senior accounting major.

Through his efforts on La Salle’s behalf, Leonard has gotten to know La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., ‘70, and James Ahern, ‘70, President of the Alumni Association. Ahern and Leonard were members of the same class but never met.

“I always tell people that who I am is based on the education I got, how the (Christian) Brothers cared for us,” Ahern said. “They also taught us to let your deeds speak for you, and that’s why Tom and others do things behind the scenes, doing things that need to be done.”
We invite you to celebrate with La Salle University!

Saturday, February 23, 2008
6:30 p.m.

The Charter Dinner celebrates the founding of La Salle College on March 20, 1863, and pays tribute to the generations of Christian Brothers, laypersons, and clergy whose dedication has made La Salle University the prominent institution that it is today.

Since its founding, La Salle has played a leadership role in Philadelphia as both an educational institution and a responsible corporate citizen. In recognition of the importance of leadership in our community, La Salle University recognizes an individual who has displayed outstanding leadership in the corporate, civic, governmental, or religious communities with the presentation of La Salle University's Leadership Award.

Proceeds from the annual Charter Dinner and Leadership Award ceremony are utilized to enhance the University's Scholarship Fund, thereby benefiting future generations of La Salle students.

An Unbelievable Change of Heart

WHEN JANET DENNIS, M.ED ’96, WON HER SILVER MEDAL, it was just like any other athletic victory—the pumping adrenaline, racing pulse, and thumping heart. The only difference was that the heart leaping with thrill and excitement inside Dennis’ chest had only taken residence there a few months before. On June 18, 2006, Dennis won the silver medal in the 100-meter backstroke at the Transplant Games in Louisville, Ky., representing Team Philadelphia.

Less than two years earlier, in October 2004, she had no idea that her routine life was about to change forever. Dennis had spent more than a decade as a social worker for the Philadelphia Department of Human Services, extending her help and heart to hundreds of children with family needs. Suddenly, while walking up her steps one day she lost her breath—it happened several more times that night before Dennis became seriously concerned.

During the first hospital stay of her life, tests revealed some shocking and devastating news: a virus of unknown origin had invaded Dennis’ heart and catapulted her into sudden heart failure. For the next several months, she tried to go about normal life, but after dozens of medications, countless trips to the emergency room, and a pacemaker and defibrillator that failed to remedy her damaged heart, Dennis was put on the list for a heart transplant.

A hospital bed was not the location she had envisioned celebrating her 50th birthday, but Dennis took it all in stride and even helped other heart patients cope with the difficult changes and decisions they were facing. After six and a half weeks on the transplant list, Dennis received a heart at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania. She was back to work a mere 20 months later.

“I have an internal medal. What do I need trophies for?”

—Janet Dennis

Dennis wasn’t able to continue with her previous position because of the physical demands, but she still works as an advocate for children in placement by ensuring that their health-care needs are met. Dennis’ life obviously changed forever when she received a new heart—“My life was so simple before,” she said. “Now I have this story.” As a speaker for the Gift of Life, a nonprofit agency that recovers and distributes organs and tissues to enhance or save lives in eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, and Delaware, she shares that story with donors’ families and other transplant recipients like herself.

In addition to her newfound public-speaking engagements, Dennis’ heart led her to some unexpected athletic aspirations. After cardiac therapy, she joined a gym to keep her heart strong and although she couldn’t even complete a lap in the pool, she began swimming.

Her nightly training ultimately led to a silver medal in the Transplant Games and a qualification for the world games in Thailand. Dennis was not able to attend the international competition, but she’s busy training for next year’s games in Pittsburgh and the next round of international games to be held in 2009 in Australia. She’s even planning to add some new events to her list—shot put, softball throw, discus, and long jump. When she’s not training, you can find her on the Schuylkill River, practicing with the Tsunami Dragons, the women’s rowing team she recently joined.

Through the Gift of Life program, Dennis sent her silver medal, along with a letter, to her donor’s family to thank them and tell them about her new life with the heart. She plans to mail future medals and updates to the family of the stranger who gave her life. “I have an internal medal,” Janet said. “What do I need trophies for?”
Indonesia: The Great Transition
EDITED BY JOHN BRESNAN, '50
Rowman & Littlefield Publishers Inc., 2005; 318 pp.; $32.95

Indonesia: The Great Transition depicts the country's struggles as it transitions from its authoritarian government to a democratic era. Scholars analyze what caused the country's social, political, and economic uproot during reform.

The late John Bresnan, '50, was a Philadelphia native and expert in Southeast Asian affairs. He earned a bachelor's degree in English at La Salle, received his master's degree in political science from New York University, and served in the U.S. Army. As an executive of the Ford Foundation, he spent eight years in Indonesia. Bresnan helped Indonesian scholars attend U.S. graduate schools and he received the country's greatest civilian honor. He is survived by his wife, four children, and eight grandchildren.

Mox Nix: A Tale of Corporate Corruption, Chemical Toxicity, and Lusts
BY THOMAS HAAG, '63
Self published, 2006; 209 pp.; $17.50

In Mox Nix, Harry Schoen is a decorated Korean veteran, Ivy League grad, and rising executive. But he wrestles with guilt about his war service, the decay of his marriage, and misgivings of corporate warfare. He must confront life's conflicts when he stumbles upon evidence that his company is hiding a deadly secret.

Thomas Haag, '63, of Philadelphia, served in the U.S. Army and earned a bachelor's degree in chemistry from La Salle. He worked for 38 years with Philadelphia-based Rohm and Haas Co. before retiring in 1991 as Director of Corporate Development. He and his wife live in Holland, Pa. They have two daughters and five grandchildren.

A Season in Purgatory: Villanova and Life in College Football's Lower Class
BY TONY MOSS, '98
Bison Books, 2007; 333 pp.; $19.95

A Season in Purgatory is the story of a school where basketball is king and the Villanova football team battles opponents both on and off the field. With little cash or recruiting power, the Division I-AA Wildcats must justify their existence by wading through political mire to bring glory to a school that largely ignores its efforts.

Tony Moss, '98, received his bachelor's degree in communication from La Salle. He is the NFL Editor/Senior Editor at the Sports Network, a wire service based in Philadelphia. Previously, Moss spent four seasons as the country's only writer to cover 47 Division I-AA college football games. He has covered Super Bowls XXXIX, XL, and XLI.

Another Chance: Tales of South Philadelphia
BY DOMINIC T. BIELLO, '76
iUniverse Inc, 2006; 352 pp.; $20.95

Another Chance twists revenge, forbidden love, and criminal ambition for a tale of duplicity, intrigue, and transformation on the bustling streets of South Philadelphia. During the Lenten season of 1972, everyone must seek personal resolution in the labyrinth of their conflicted lives. The lucky ones get another chance.

Philadelphiaan Dominic T. Biello, '76, graduated from La Salle University with a bachelor's degree in history. An alumnus of the American Film Institute TV Writer's Program in Los Angeles, Biello's award-winning screenplay, Coercion, is being novelized for a second installment of Tales of South Philadelphia. Currently, Biello writes articles and completes research about the U.S. Airborne during World War II.

A Special Summer
BY GAYE RIDDICK-BURDEN, '99, MSN '01, WRITING AS VICTORIA WELLS

In A Special Summer, Summer Jackson is too involved in nursing and her friends to be concerned with men. She refuses potential suitors, including Nick Stiles. But he's captivated by Summer, and she finally consents. When Nick becomes restless, Summer is shattered and vows never to see him again. Nick swears to make her pay.

Gaye Riddick-Burden, '99, MSN '01, who writes under the name Victoria Wells, is a Philadelphia native. Riddick-Burden received her associate's degree in applied science from the Community College of Philadelphia and earned her bachelor's and master's degrees in nursing from La Salle. A nurse practitioner, she has dedicated her career to patients battling sickle-cell disease.

"Book Notes" will be featured periodically in upcoming issues of the magazine and its companion piece, the Alumni News. We invite you to let us know if there's a book written by an alum within the last year that might be highlighted by e-mailing Liz Vargo at vargo@lasalle.edu.
Lessons for Real-World Students

LASALLIAN EDUCATION has a passion for the practical, a passion for being carefully attentive to the real world of students and to the real needs of students. Our ministry is one that integrates the life of faith with this real for the practical. The maxim of St. Augustine is our own: “Pray as if everything depends on God, and work as if everything depends on you.”

St. La Salle set the example. He was never one to avoid the practical; indeed, he embraced it. St. La Salle did not write about educational philosophy, he wrote educational handbooks, textbooks, and meditations for teachers. His textbooks focused on everything from the pronunciation of French syllables to Gospel maxims, the duties of a Christian, and the practical rules of politeness for inner-city boys—with a whole chapter on “Yawning, Spitting, and Coughing.”

The schools themselves were eminently practical. Writing practice concentrated on contracts and ledgers, while math skills dealt with the French monetary system. Once students learned the basics of reading, his book on politeness was the reading text, published in an ornate script so as to acquaint students with the popular style. Students who had to work during the week were taught mathematics, drafting, and commerce on Sundays. Schools on the seacoast included classes on navigation and seamanship. In his letters, St. La Salle insisted that the schools be well-run and its teachers be well-trained. Everything was done to insure that these poor and working-class students would succeed in French society and become mature members of the Church.

Such a commitment to the real needs of students was not without its difficulties. One might almost call the first schools “subversive.” When the Guild of Writing Masters, in effect, sued the Brothers for teaching writing—and won—St. La Salle ignored the judgment and found other ways of teaching writing, because he knew that it was a vital practical skill. When the local bishop in Chartres, a friend of St. La Salle’s from seminary days, challenged St. La Salle’s practice of teaching reading by starting with French instead of Latin syllables, St. La Salle held his ground, writing “The practical and spiritual welfare of the students entrusted to his care remained a primary focus throughout De La Salle’s life.”

Timeline of Events

The continuing story of the Lasallian Christian Brothers, 1900 to present:

By 1904, 11,626 Christian Brothers live and work in France; 4,839 are outside of France.

Between 1901 and 1912, anti-religious secularization laws in France forbid the religious to own property, wear religious habits, or live in community. As a result, Brothers left France to establish communities in Southern Belgium, Canada, and Spain, and they laid the foundation for new districts in Brazil, Parana, Mexico, North Africa, and Australia.

Between 1936 and 1939, 165 Brothers are put to death during the Spanish Civil War.

In 1956, the General Chapter convenes and begins to revise the Christian Brothers’ Rules and Constitutions by encouraging a critical study of the writings of St. John Baptist de La Salle and an investigation of his spirituality.

By 1966, 2,784 Christian Brothers live and work in France; 13,951 are outside of France.

The General Chapter of 1966–1967 is propelled forward by the sweeping changes brought about by the Second Vatican Council. The Chapter works to reaffirm the identity of the Brothers, to recommit itself to its mission of “service of the poor through education,” and to recognize the valuable contributions of lay teachers in schools around the world and the need to fully integrate laypeople into the lives of schools.

Today, the Christian Brothers, along with 73,000 lay associates, serve more than 200,000 students in 80 countries.

This down-to-earth practicality is found today in Lasallian schools throughout the world, from street kids in Vietnam who are taught to repair motorcycle engines to students in the United States who are familiar with service-learning, retreats, and education for life. Lasallian education pays practical attention to the real relationships between people, to the purposeful integration of budding personal convictions and talents, and to the persistent cultivation of genuine human principles. Such are the deeply held convictions (the faith) and the practical sensibilities (the zeal) that continue to make this educational enterprise so necessary and so successful.

—Br. George Van Grieken, F.S.C., is Director of Vocation Ministry for the San Francisco District of the Brothers of the Christian Schools. He is the author of Touching the Hearts of Students: Characteristics of Lasallian Schools and served as guest editor of the Winter 2006-07 issue of La Salle Magazine.

We invite feedback on this issue and welcome ideas for future installments of the series. Please contact Marian Butcher at butcher@lasalle.edu.

Further Reflections

The Teacher

The master teacher taught a class.
At the end of the year
Most of the students were astounded at the growth
They saw in themselves.
Others noticed it as well.
They said that it must be a gift,
The work of God.
Some of them asked the master teacher;
“How do you do it? What’s your secret?”

The master teacher replied:
“I am a person like everyone else.
I have no secret. There is only this;
When I begin to think about the task I’ve been given,
I guard my soul and don’t worry about details,
All the trifles that are not to the point.
I go away in order to set
My heart at rest.
After a few days of solitude
I’ve forgotten goals and objectives.
After a week
I’ve forgotten praise or criticism.
After ten days
I’ve forgotten myself
With all my hopes and plans.

By this time all thoughts about the school,
About organization and administration have faded away.
All that might distract me from the work
Has vanished.
I become collected in one single thought,
Teaching that class.

Then I go into the community
To see my students in their natural state.
When the particular students show up before me,
The teaching appears in them; clearly, beyond doubt.
All I have to do is to reach out
And begin.

If I had not met those particular students
There would have been
No teaching at all.

What happened?
My own collected thought
Encountered the hidden potential in the student;
From this live encounter came the work
Which you describe as a gift from God.”

Alumni Association Bestows Highest Honors Upon Devlin, McNamee

This November, La Salle’s Alumni Association recognized two individuals for their exemplary service: Hugh Devlin, ’64, received the John J. Finley, ’24, Award and the Rev. John P. McNamee received the Signum Fidelis Medal.

Named in honor of a former Alumni Association President, the John J. Finley, ’24, Award goes to a La Salle alumnus or alumna who has demonstrated outstanding leadership in service to the University. Devlin recently concluded the successful Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future major gift initiative, which he chaired and launched with President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., ’70. The initiative surpassed its $25 million goal by raising $28.3 million to fund a new science and technology center and strengthen the University’s endowment. Devlin said he was surprised and “very pleased” at Br. Michael’s announcement that the center would be named the Hugh and Nacy Devlin Center for Science and Technology.

“Leaders lead, and Hugh Devlin has led,” said Br. Michael as he presented Devlin with the award. “Here is one alum who sparked the interest and generosity of others, and look at what it has begat.”

Since 1942, the Signum Fidelis Medal has been presented to an individual or group who has made significant contributions to humanitarian principles and has upheld the mission of the University and Christian Brothers. Not only has McNamee led St. Malachy School and Parish for more than 35 years, but he tirelessly meets the needs of his inner-city neighborhood.

McNamee reorganized the Ludlow Youth Community Center and co-founded the Southwest Community Enrichment Center—a nonprofit that serves 400 adults, children, and senior citizens each week in the Kingsessing section of Philadelphia.

“Fr. McNamee and St. Malachy’s have not only endured, they have flourished in North Philadelphia,” Br. Michael said. “They have brought help, healing, and hope to thousands whose lives are otherwise bound in bleakness.”

New Supermarket and Shopping Center at La Salle Slated for Fall 2008 Opening

La Salle University recently hosted the groundbreaking for a new $15 million shopping center on the University’s Good Shepherd property, located on Chew Avenue between Church Lane and Wister Street.

The 80,000-square-foot shopping center is the result of a partnership among La Salle University, Moreland Development, Fresh Grocer, and elected officials.

In 2004, State Rep. John Myers and concerned citizens met with State Rep. Dwight Evans, ’75, to discuss the lack of affordable supermarkets in La Salle’s neighborhood. Evans presented the University’s administration with the idea of developing a shopping center.

At the groundbreaking, Evans said, “No one does anything by themselves. The key element to all of this is leadership—people working together to make a difference—and that is what is taking place in this community.”

“This is the first part of what we hope to be a continuing involvement and partnership with the community to make life better for everybody,” said La Salle’s President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., ’70.

Upon its expected completion next fall, the shopping center will include the neighborhood’s first grocery store in more than 40 years—a 50,000-square-foot Fresh Grocer—as well as a Starbucks Café, a T-Mobile, a GameStop, America’s Best Eyewear, a Rite Aid pharmacy, and a bank.

Joining Reps. Evans and Myers in the Shoppes at La Salle retail initiative were State Sen. LeAnna M. Washington and Philadelphia City Councilwoman Donna Reed Miller.

Family Weekend 2007

The Parents’ Association paid tribute to La Salle’s home city during this year’s Family Weekend, which drew more than 300 families. Activities included a Philadelphia-style lunch on the quad, featuring cheesesteaks, soft pretzels, and a visit from a few Mummers; a trip to the Philadelphia Zoo; a Center City excursion for sightseeing or shopping; and a Philly Ghost Tour through Independence Park and Society Hill. Back on campus, students and their families cheered on the Explorer football and volleyball teams; enjoyed a performance by Improv 101; La Salle’s student improvisational comedy team; and participated in a Sunday liturgy followed by a brunch with Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., ’70, La Salle’s President.

WORLD WAR II SPY RECOUNTS EXPERIENCES

Now 87 and living in California, Marta Cohn recently recounted her book, Behind Enemy Lines: The True Story of a French Jewish Spy in Nazi Germany, during La Salle’s Diplomat-in-Residence Program. Cohn greeted an overflowing auditorium and explained her journey first as a nurse whose fiancé and older sister both died at the hands of the Nazis, and then as a member of the French Army chosen to spy on the Germans. At 80 years old, she received France’s highest military honor.
Board Greets Five New Members

La Salle’s Board of Trustees welcomed five new members at its first meeting this fall.

Edward J. Fierko, ’63, of Marlton, N.J., is the President of EJF Associates. He is the Vice President of the Water Quality Research Foundation and is a member of the Board of Past Presidents of the Water Quality Association and the Board of Directors of Stotosys Inc. (NASDAQ). He received both a Lifetime Membership Award and an Award of Merit from the Water Quality Association, and he was previously honored with the University’s Michael A. D’Angelis Accounting Award.

William E. Kelly, ’74, a partner with Nixon Peabody LLP, is involved in many community organizations in Boston, Mass., including the Institute of Contemporary Art, the AIDS Action Committee, the Boston Lyric Opera, and the Speakeasy Stage Co. He also was on the development committee of the Boston Living Center.

Brother Dennis Malloy, F.S.C., ’74, is Provincial for the Baltimore District of the Brothers of the Christian Schools and also is Executive Director of St. Gabriel’s System. He is a member of the National Association of Social Workers (NASW), the Pennsylvania Chapter of NASW, the Correctional Education Association, and the Pennsylvania Council for Children, Youth, and Family Services. He received the Distinguished Lasallian Education Award of the Baltimore District in 2001.

William W. Mathews III, ’90, of Glenside, Pa., is a partner with Klehr, Harrison, Harvey, Banzburg & Ellers. He has been a member of the Alumni Board of Directors since 1990 and served as President of the Alumni Association from 2003 to 2005. Matthews also serves on the St. Luke the Evangelist Home and School Board and the Glenside Youth Athletic Association.

James J. Smart, CPA, ’79, is the founder and CEO of Smart Business Advisory and Consulting LLC. He is a member of the American and Pennsylvania Institute of Certified Public Accountants and sits on the Board of Directors of the Chester County Chamber of Business and Industry. Smart’s firm was awarded the Devon-Berwyn Business of the year in 2002, and he was named Chester County Chamber of Business and Industry’s Small Business Leader of the Year in 2000.

OUTGOING TRUSTEES HONORED

Outgoing Board of Trustees members Kathleen M. Burns, ’75, MBA ’90, and Nicholas J. Lisi, Esq., ’82, were honored for their service to La Salle’s Board of Trustees during the Board’s meeting and dinner in October. Burns joined the board in 1997 and Lisi joined in 1992.

LA SALLE UNIVERSITY HAS RECENTLY RECEIVED THE FOLLOWING GRANTS:

- Pennsylvania Higher Education Foundation: $205,000 Nursing Education Grant to the School of Nursing and Health Sciences to provide scholarship assistance to full-time undergraduates majoring in nursing.

- Pennsylvania Higher Education Foundation and Independence Blue Cross: Independence Blue Cross Supplemental Graduate Nurse Education grant of $50,000 to the School of Nursing and Health Sciences to provide scholarships to students enrolled in graduate nursing programs.

- Pennsylvania Higher Education Foundation and Independence Blue Cross: Independence Blue Cross Supplemental Nursing Education Program grant of $16,610 to the School of Nursing and Health Sciences to provide scholarship assistance to full-time students enrolled in the BSN Program.

- Pennsylvania Higher Education Foundation and Independence Blue Cross: $93,750 Independence Blue Cross Nurse Scholars Grant to the School of Nursing and Health Sciences to provide scholarship assistance to full-time and part-time graduate students preparing to become nurse educators.

- Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board: $17,000 to the Alcohol and Other Drug Education Center for a project focusing on student athletes.

- Violette de Mazia Foundation: $38,100 grant to the La Salle Art Museum for a course titled “Informed Perception: An Objective Approach to Aesthetic Appreciation.”
In Memoriam: Brother John Johnston, F.S.C.

An influential Christian Brother, University Trustee, and Lasallian leader has died.

Brother John Johnston, F.S.C., lost his yearlong battle with cancer on Oct. 11 at St. Francis Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., at age 73. He had devoted himself to the Christian Brothers for 56 years.

A native of Memphis, Br. John worked as a high school teacher, administrator, and Director of the order’s student Brothers. He was well-known for his leadership skills and enthusiasm for working with youth.

In 1971, Br. John was appointed Provincial of the St. Louis District of the Christian Brothers. He then served as Vicar General and was subsequently elected Superior General at the Brothers’ International Headquarters in Rome. In this role, he visited every country ministered by the Christian Brothers.

Br. John returned to Memphis in 2003 as Senior Consultant, Lasallian Association for Mission. He continued to travel for presentations within the United States, Europe, Haiti, Africa, and Mexico. Fellow La Salle trustees and professors awaited Br. John’s inspiring retreats and recalled his passion for working beyond the call of duty. His audiences in France, Spain, and Mexico also had the pleasure of listening to Br. John’s talks in their native tongues.

Over the past decade, Br. John devoted himself to transforming the Lasallian Mission of the Brothers of the Christian Schools. He stressed that the Brothers and lay people should collaborate as part of an educational community that keeps the schools’ life and mission viable.

Even after being diagnosed with cancer, Br. John invested his time and talents into Christian Brothers activities.

“I believe all Brothers would join me in saying that Brother John provided great inspiration and leadership,” said La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., ’70. “I also believe that all members of La Salle’s Board of Trustees came to respect him as a man of great integrity and broad vision for the Lasallian mission and the Catholic Church around the world.”

Br. John attended Little Flower School and Christian Brothers College, now Christian Brothers High School, in Memphis. He earned both his bachelor’s and master’s degrees in education from St. Mary’s College in Winona, Minn.

He held leadership positions as Auditor for the Synod on America (1997), Consultant for the Vatican Congregation for Consecrated Life (1995–2005), Assistant Special Secretary for the Synod of Consecrated Life (1994), and Vice President of the Union of Superiors General in Rome for nine years.

Br. John had been continuing his education part time with several institutions and received honorary degrees from eight colleges and universities.

He is survived by three brothers.

President and CEO of Anexinet Receives IT Leadership Award

Diego F. Calderin, ’83, President and Chief Executive Officer of Anexinet Corp., recently received La Salle University’s IT Leadership Award.

Calderin’s family fled Cuba in 1962, settling in Philadelphia with only $50.

Attending La Salle on a scholarship, Calderin planned to study medicine. But a conversation with Geri Seitchik, Ph.D., the University’s pre-med adviser, changed his life. She said that even straight-A students weren’t getting into medical school, and Calderin had Bs.

“She did it in a nice way, and her telling me to consider alternatives to medicine was one of the best things that happened to me,” he recalled.

Calderin took a computer science course, switched majors, and improved his GPA. After graduation, he did computer work for companies such as Lockheed Martin and GE, but thought about starting his own business. When he considered the risk, he thought of his father.

“He came to this country with nothing, and when I think of the risk he took, then my risk (of starting a company) would pale by comparison,” Calderin said.

Calderin chairs the University’s Integrated Science, Business, and Technology Advisory Board and helped to design the program.

“He’s been a leader and innovator in incorporating technology with business, and La Salle’s Computer Science Advisory Board felt he was quite deserving of this honor,” said Margaret McCoe, assistant professor of mathematics and computer science.

University Recognizes Faculty Achievements

PAULIN RECEIVES SERVICE AWARD

When Associate Professor of economics and Faculty Senate President Beth Paulin came to La Salle nearly 20 years ago, she knew it was just the right fit.

“When I interviewed here, I just felt like this was the place for me,” Paulin said.

Paulin has embraced the University’s mission of service and was recently awarded the 2007 Faculty Distinguished Service Award for her exemplary professional and personal commitment.

“Service is part of our mission. It is who we are as educators and people,” Paulin said. “I believe this award is in recognition of fulfilling that mission.”

Paulin said a two-week Lasallian Leadership Conference last summer in Rome, Italy, brought the mission even closer to her soul.

As one colleague noted, Paulin “has been willing to sacrifice her time and other endeavors to serve her colleagues and the University.”

KELLY HONORED FOR SCHOLARSHIP

According to religion Professor Jeffrey Kelly, ’54, “Knowledge of religion is essential in order to understand the root causes of so many conflicts in our troubled world today and the demands religious faith makes on our moral behavior, as well as the ethical conduct of our nation.”

In recognition of his scholarly achievements and research, Kelly recently received the University’s Faculty Distinguished Scholar Award.

Kelly is a leading scholar on the life and theology of Dietrich Bonhoeffer, who is considered the most famous martyr of the German Resistance and Nazism. Kelly also has received the Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching and the Dr. Roland Holroyd Award for Distinguished Teaching and Service.

“Geff is a wonderful—and demanding—teacher who genuinely cares about his students,” said Margaret McGuinness, Ph.D., Chair of La Salle’s Religion Department.

—Amy Gardner Cranston

MACLEOD EARS TRIPLE HONORS

After receiving the Communication Department’s Shining Star Award and the University’s Lasallian Distinguished Educator Award, Assistant Professor of communication Sid MacLeod recently received a similar award, the 2007 Distinguished Lasallian Educator Award from the Baltimore Province of the Christian Brothers.

“It was a great honor,” said MacLeod, who is also an Honorary Christian Brother and has received the Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching.

MacLeod began teaching public speaking and theater at La Salle 48 years ago. He also worked with the student theater group, developed the University’s audio-visual department, taught television courses, served as a faculty senator, and made several documentaries.

“He’s an enthusiastic teacher, a caring and compassionate colleague, and a wonderful person,” said Communication Department Chair Lynne Texter, Ph.D.

Alumni Volunteers Leaders Conference

The third biennial Alumni Volunteers Leaders Conference was held in September at Normandy Farm in Blue Bell, Pa. Coinciding with the election of new Alumni President Jim Ahern, ’70, the conference provided alumni volunteers with an opportunity to network, plan upcoming events, and attend presentations on volunteerism.

Giving Thanks for Those Called to Duty

For more than 20 years, La Salle University has offered its gratitude to police officers and firefighters who serve the community by preparing a pre-Thanksgiving feast at the 35th Police District Headquarters. The University and community united to support the family of Officer Charles “Chuck” Cassidy, who was killed Oct. 31 during a nearby robbery. The event, organized by retired University employee June Robinson, involves the University’s Food Services Department and the La Salle Ambassadors.
Exhibit Offers Insight into Artist's Life

This fall, leading Philadelphia mural artist David McShane, '88, returned to his location of self-discovery to tackle the frequently asked question, "Which One Are You?"

This probe has plagued McShane as a twin and one of eight children. At La Salle, he was forced to revisit the question as a pre-med student whose true passion was for the fine arts.

"This was the place where I was trying to find out who I was," he said. "Being a twin and being a McShane, it was hard to find my identity. But it's also, 'which one are you?'—a doctor or an artist?"

McShane toyed with the question in his exhibit, "Which One Are You?"

"It was a unique glimpse into what makes Dave, Dave," said Art Museum Director Madeleine Viljaan, Ph.D.

Well-known for his larger-than-life murals for Philadelphia's Mural Arts Program, McShane displayed a smaller, more intimate collection of art at La Salle. During his artist talk, McShane illustrated his evolution as a fine artist. The composition of his imagery is "interesting and makes a whole different statement," Viljaan said.

Now teaching at his alma mater, McShane encourages students to live their dreams. "Not many people can say they know someone who's a fine artist and makes a living off of it," he said. "You can follow your heart and be an actor, poet, or artist. Life's too short—you can always change your mind."

25TH ANNIVERSARY OF RISK MANAGEMENT AND INSURANCE PROGRAM

This fall, the University celebrated the 25th anniversary of the Risk Management and Insurance program with a reception at the Physick House in Philadelphia. A few members of the program who attended the event are (top, from left) Tom Dinczynsky, CPCU, AMIM, '87; Dennis O'Neill, '02; Simone Brewster, AU, '02; Terry Macke, CPCU, '74; George Haitsch, ARM, '86; (bottom, from left) Kathleen McNichol, MBA, CPCU, ARM, '75; and James Sherlock, CPCU, CLU, ARM, '75.

SADOFF RECEIVES FIRST HEART OF GOLD AWARD

La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, honors the first Heart of Gold recipient Jean Sadoff, MSW, during the 25th anniversary celebration of La Salle's Social Work program in October. This inaugural award was created for someone who exemplifies the profession and is a role model for other social workers. Sadoff co-produced the film Standing on My Sisters' Shoulders with her husband, Dr. Robert Sadoff, to depict the role of women during the Civil Rights movement in Mississippi in the 1960s.

LA SALLE HOSTS DIGITAL ARTS CONFERENCE

In November, La Salle hosted the annual International Digital Media and Arts Association conference in Philadelphia. This year's theme, "Beyond Boundaries: Pedagogy and Change in the Academic Environment," included topics on collaborative structures, mobile media, social networking, games, and digital media design. La Salle's program in Digital Arts and Multimedia Design is chaired by Conrad Gleber (right). For more information on the event, visit www.idmaa.org/idmaa2007/.
La Salle Welcomes New Vice President for Enrollment Services

John Dolan, La Salle’s new Vice President for Enrollment Services, is such an admirer of the Christian Brothers that he is willing to live with them—for a while.

Since joining the University in July, he has been living in a Christian Brothers residence until his family relocates from Denver, Colo., set for January 2008. This domestic experience only underscores how much he admires the order, which is one reason he applied for the position.

“This is a great opportunity to serve a Christian Brothers college and a Catholic institution,” said Dolan, who had been the President and Chief Executive Officer at the Catholic Foundation in Denver. Prior to that, he was Vice Chancellor for Enrollment at the University of Denver. He has also held senior leadership positions in enrollment management at The Catholic University of America and the University of Tampa.

“This opportunity to join La Salle University is a chance to work at an institution that changes lives,” he said. “Christian Brothers schools help people achieve their life’s dreams, something I care deeply about. So this is a great fit for me.”

At La Salle, Dolan will be responsible for recruiting students in its three schools and one college, undergraduate and graduate students, and part-time and/or evening students, too.

He said he hopes to attract the students who will “fit” in with the University.

“We have a goal of 650 first-year students (for next fall),” he said. “Who are they? They are students who are leaders, the students actively involved in their high schools. That’s the La Salle fit. That’s who we are.”

With the planned construction of a new science and technology center and the purchase of Germantown Hospital, creating a West Campus, “La Salle is going to be a very different school from what we see now,” he said. “The science and technology center will boost our science programs and our School of Nursing and Heath Sciences will have state-of-the-art facilities (on West Campus). We’re going to recruit the students who will fit with the new facilities, as well attract students to our core programs, such as English.”

A graduate of Benedictine College in Kansas, Dolan is a graduate student in the Master of Liberal Arts program at the University of Denver.

Dolan and his wife have four children, two sons who serve in the military, a daughter in college, and another daughter in middle school.

Ricci Steps into Two New Roles

La Salle’s former Vice President of Enrollment Services Raymond Ricci, ’67, has taken on two new positions—Special Assistant to the President for Mission Integration and Assistant to the Provost for Freshman Year Programs.

For more than 40 years, Ricci has served the University as an Evening Division academic counselor, a teacher, Director of University Planning, and Registrar. He had served as Vice President for Enrollment Services since 1990.

As Special Assistant to the President for Mission Integration, Ricci will advise La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., ’70, on issues related to the University’s mission.

Ricci received the University’s Distinguished Lasallian Educator Award in 2004, and he participated in the three-year Lasallian Leadership Institute. He has served on the Mission Council of the Baltimore District and is also serving on the Mission and Ministry Committee of a new unified eastern district of the Christian Brothers.

As Special Assistant to the Provost for Freshman Year Programs, Ricci will help create a positive college experience for newly enrolled students. He will continue to develop an early-alert intervention plan for at-risk students and the assessment of Learning Support Programs and a variety of programs for first-year students.

“The effective integration of our mission into the fabric of life at La Salle and the improvement of student retention and satisfaction are among the University’s strategic priorities,” Br. Michael said. “I feel certain that Ray’s experience and motivation will help us accomplish these two important goals.”

Creating a Positive First Impression through Academic Advising

One of the most appealing features of a college or university is the ability for students to bond and communicate with their professors, according to Jayne Drake, Ph.D., a professor of English at Temple University and member of the Board of Directors of the National Academic Advising Association (NACADA).

Drake recently met with nearly 50 La Salle University advisers during her presentation “Mediating the Dissonance: Academic Advising at the Intersection between Expectations and Experience.” As the history of advising has changed, so has its prominence in providing quality education, Drake noted.

“Often, it is the experience that will either lead a student to stay or a student to leave,” she said.

According to Phenix Frazier, La Salle’s Coordinator of Freshman Advising and Tutoring Support, an advising workshop is presented each fall semester—but this is the first time the University has hosted a national speaker. Drake covered the history and methods of advising over the last 50 years. What one professor in 1953 once described as the most tedious and clerical process is now viewed as an essential relationship with students, she said.

NACADA describes advising as less about procedure and more about disseminating the right information to students so they learn to make key decisions about their future. “Advising is way more than scheduling,” Drake said. “One of the best ways to retain a student is to connect them with the institution. ... If you can find a way to connect that student to you and to the institution, you are way ahead of the game.”

Drake noted the thoughtfulness and energy of La Salle advisers who attended the presentation and said it suggests that La Salle has “a great group of committed advisers.”

La Salle Honors Two Scientist Alumni

During the Honors Convocation this fall, La Salle honored alumni Naomi J. Halas, Ph.D., ’80, and J. Patrick Henry, Ph.D., ’69, for their significant contributions to science.

Halas, a professor at Rice University, has pioneered the use of opticals in nanotechnology, which has implications for treating cancer. Henry, a professor at the University of Hawaii, has contributed to understanding the evolution of the universe.

In granting the degree to Halas, President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., ’70, said, “Your work has been recognized by the federal government, industry, academia, professional societies, publications, and women’s organizations, among others ... It is important to note that we honor you also for the ‘spiritual barometer,’ as you call it, which guides your life, for your belief in putting a human face on engineering, and for your devotion to your students.”

Halas invented nanoshells—miniscule particles of gold encased in gold, which can be adapted by light. Nanoshells that are injected into the veins of cancerous mice naturally clustered in tumors. When a laser was beamed at the nanoshells, it heated and destroyed the tumor without harming the surrounding tissue.

Upon honoring Henry, Br. Michael said, “For more than three decades, you have devoted yourself to the quest for scientific knowledge applied to solving the major mysteries of the universe. ... We hope that our students will be inspired by your enthusiasm and accomplishments.”

Henry is internationally renowned for his work in cosmology. He made the first observations of clusters of galaxies at cosmological distances. Currently, he’s researching what scientists call the “dark matter problem” and the “dark energy problem”—the major questions in our understanding of the universe.

Both recipients credited La Salle’s professors for their inspiration and support.

MONKS OF THE DEPRUNG GOMANG MONASTERY VISIT CAMPUS
La Salle was treated to a quiet and colorful display this fall when monks of the Deprung Gomang monastery in India created a sand mandala for the Diplomat-in-Residence program. Their intricately designed image—made from crushed and colored marble—was constructed in the La Salle Art Museum over one week’s time and destroyed upon its completion. The University first hosted the monks two years ago.

Web Casting is a Winner for La Salle Sports Fans and Students

BY BILLY ORNOORFF, '07

DO YOU LOVE LA SALLE ATHLETICS BUT ARE UNABLE to catch your favorite game? Now—whether you're local to Philly or tuning in from across the country—you can access
La Salle sports from virtually any place at any time.

An innovative project launched by the Athletics and Communication departments is delivering University athletics straight to fans through live Web casts.

“Making athletic events accessible to our fans through video streaming is something that we are certainly excited about, and what really makes this project such a great endeavor is that we are also providing La Salle students with some excellent practical experience,” said Athletic Director Thomas Brennan, Ed.D. “I also feel like this is an area where La Salle can be in the forefront by setting the standard for video streaming among (other) schools.”

The University has fully committed to the project—providing financing, technology, and research—by expanding viewership with a subscription through CSTV on www.goexplorers.
com. Viewers can sign up for $9.95 per month or $79.95 a year, with access to La Salle basketball, soccer, swimming, and lacrosse, as well as basketball games within the Atlantic 10 conference.
In November, more than 100 people had subscribed.

Athletic Communications Director Kale Beers, '95, said, “As an alumnus of the Communication Department, to be able to give the students this opportunity is very exciting.
The department already does a great job preparing students for careers in journalism, but this will ultimately make their efforts better.”

Each production requires input from student volunteers of both the Athletics and Communication departments.
Sophomore communication major Jake Holler works with about eight students to broadcast basketball games.

“Web streaming is the future of media. I’m pretty excited to be a part of this. ... It’s more creative, innovative, and expands my horizons.”

—Jake Holler

The Web cast strives “to do a complete television production,” Beers said. Unlike other schools that may use a single camera or a TriCaster with three cameras, La Salle invested in full television gear with a 12-channel system.

Up to five cameras broadcast the action to viewers during Explorer basketball games. Sports held at McCarty Stadium feature a single-camera view of the entire field. The games are automatically archived, and Holler said highlights are uploaded to Athletics’ main page within an hour. As the project gains momentum, organizers hope to upgrade production and include features like replays and slow motion.

Sid MacLeod, assistant professor of communication, researched Web-casting technology and drove the decision-making process.

“With the education that exists in today’s world, employers want as much real-world working experience as they can get,” MacLeod said. “Our students are producing a real-live television show, and that really says something about La Salle University.”

The partnership between La Salle Athletics and the Communication Department will continue to both expand the boundaries of La Salle’s athletics and enhance the education of La Salle’s communication students.

Three Alumni Join the Priesthood

Formerly a vice president of Liberty Mutual, Fr. Hoare of Willow Grove, Pa., now serves as a parochial vicar in Hurlersville, N.C. Fr. Hoare completed his studies for the priesthood at St. Charles Seminary in Wynnewood, Pa., where he received both M.A. and M.Div. degrees. Intrigued with the growing Catholic population in the South, he looks forward to “being part of evangelizing a population in North Carolina that is less than 4 percent Catholic, but growing through relocations from the Northeast and Midwest and through those converting to the faith.” He was ordained for the Diocese of Charlotte.

A South Philadelphia native, Fr. Michael Marrone graduated from La Salle with a bachelor’s degree in education/social studies. From 1993 until 2001, he was a faculty member at Northeast Catholic High School, Philadelphia, and he was an adjunct professor in La Salle’s Education Department from 2000 to 2002. His preparation for the priesthood took place at St. Charles Seminary, Wynnewood, Pa., where he received both M.A. and M.Div. degrees. Ordained for the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, Fr. Marrone is a parochial vicar at St. Katherine of Sienna parish located in the Tredyffrin section of Northeast Philadelphia. He is a proud nephew of Pete Pinizzotto, the longtime campus minister.

Currently a graduate student in spiritual theology at the Telesium University, Rome, where he anticipates completing his degree in June 2008, Fr. Michael Triplett was ordained to serve in the Archdiocese of Baltimore, his native city. A member of the University’s Honors Program, he received a bachelor’s degree in religion and philosophy before entering St. Mary’s Seminary in Roland Park, Md. This was followed by studies for a bachelor’s degree in sacred theology at the Gregorian University in Rome. He said that he “finds great peace praying with and for the people, teaching the young and youth, and visiting with the elderly and infirm.”

Joseph A. Ochipinti (B.A.) of Lake Mary, Fla., is Vice President of Consumer Direct Health for United Healthcare. He and his wife, Deirdre, are enjoying the sunshine and year-round golfing.

Despite early fears of a washout, alumni, friends, and families enjoyed a successful Homecoming and Reunion 2007. Heavy rain stopped merely 30 minutes before organizers opened outdoor festivities to more than 500 returning Explorers.

For the first time during Homecoming weekend, approximately 125 guests attended Reunion celebrations around Philadelphia at establishments with alumni connections. The Class of 1987 gathered at General Lafayette Inn and Brewery, the classes of 1992 and 1997 mingled at Mad River Bar and Grille, and the Class of 2002 reunited at the Pour House Tavern.

The fifth annual pre-game Oktoberfest drew a crowd with its German food and drinks, giveaways, and Kidsfest activities. In addition to a moon bounce, face-painting, and a clown, children attempted a new putting lane with an opportunity to win prizes.

La Salle’s first post-game party entertained visitors in a “sports pub” setting with live music from an alumni band, The Union.

The Homecoming Weekend Book Drive also was a success. Thanks to Scholastic Books and generous donations during Homecoming weekend, La Salle will present Logan Elementary School with more than $2,000 worth of books.
